facturing, with a great many conservative eastern people in places of influence.

Wyoming is expected to go strongly republican in 1916. The legislature and congressional delegation are republican now, with a democratic governor and democratic secretary of state. The latter got into office on local issues. The state is fairly perspiring with fatness, colning money out of its cattle, horses, sheep and wool sold to the beligrents in Europe. The war has done more for the wool trade than a protective tariff could accomplish. If it were not for the war the wool industry would go broke under democratic free wool. The people desire the republicans to be in power when the war ends, to protect their wool and cattle with an adequate tariff. The republican legislature has placed on the statute books progressive legislation, a public utilities commission, workmen's compensation act, widow's pension, nonpartisan election of judges and other popular reforms. The democrats have no record of accomplishment. The built moosers are coming back. The state is strong for "reasonable" military preparedness. The republicans are for a good army and navy.

He has done more for Wyoming than any man in the state, and still has his shoulder to the wheel for the industrial upbuilding of the commonwealth. What a record he has: Territorial governor, first elective governor, twenty-two years in the Senate. "A man who has been forty-five years in politics must in that time accumulate enemies," said a man who does not always agree with the senator, "and he has a crop of them."

It is a fact that some of his worst vicious enemies are his former fellow-partisans.

Woman Suffrage a Success. Wyoming has had woman suffrage I applied to competent authority for an expression of opinion as to the practical working out of the plan. The editor of the leading newspaper of the state, W. C. Deming, wrote out this opinion: "Viewed in all of its aspects, woman suffrage is a success in Wyoming.
